Reader interest inventory

The beginning of the year is a great time to administer Interest Inventories with your readers. These will help you see into their lives and support them in determining what they might like to read. Once you know your students' interests, you've got a better chance of matching them up with texts they might like.

Taking time to do Interest Inventories is an investment that will pay dividends later, especially for the struggling readers who often believe there isn't anything they would enjoy reading. With the right topic choice based on interest, you might hook every kid onto reading this year!

Do everything in your power to get kids to read—anything and everything.
