SUBJECT: Rural Tech Project Proposals Due October 8

Colleagues,

I wanted to follow up with a reminder about the deadline for the Rural Tech Project, a $600,000 challenge to advance rural technology education and prepare students for the careers of today and tomorrow. The United States Department of Education invites high schools and local educational agencies to propose technology education programs that use competency-based distance learning.

Proposals are due by 5:59 p.m. ET on October 8, and the challenge has curated resources to help entrants develop comprehensive program proposals. The resources provide support around topics ranging from program design and delivery to engaging community stakeholders.

Rural communities can learn more about entering the challenge by viewing the information session recording and answers to frequently asked questions.

Please do not hesitate to contact me should you have any questions.

Henry
